religion have not escaped this malady.
It appeared in the family of Christ But, on ms declining to accept their proposals, they forbade him not to cast out devils any more, in the name of the charter they were of the opinion, that their own way was so preferable to all others, that it were better that good should not be done at all, than that it should be done in any other way ex-cept their own. Their Master was of a different opinion. When they stated the facts of the case, he said."-Foroid them not; for there is no man Foroid them not; I in there is no man which shall do a miracle in my name, that can lightly speak evil of me.'—
He cannot be our enemy, for God would not enable an enemy to work a miracle to our injury. And if he is not our enemy, if he is doing a little good, in the state of t way, he is our friend, for he that is not against us, is on our part. And, though his usefulness, compared with yours, may be small, it is not to be despised, or prevented; for whosoever shall give you a cup of water to drink, in my name because ye belong to Christ, verily I say unto you, he shall not lose his reward. By this reproof he warned them against a vain self-complacency, and taught them to regard moral excel lence and usefulness, wherever they might find it, and in however small degrees, or however associated with relative defects, which might in some degree balance useful tendencies. This reproof implied that, in this sinful world, little good will be done if none is attempted by man, or accepted by God, beside that which is done in the best possible manner; and that although God is better plesed with high relative excellence, he finds no where such an exuberance of well conducted enterprise, as induced him to cast away the most imperfect efforts of use-fulness, on the part of his sincere friends If one shall give only a cup of cold wa ter to a disciple, prompted by real be nevolence, the reward shall not be lost.

This lesson of instruction has, however, been nearly lost, unless in these last days, it should be revived, and reduced to practice.

The feelings too common among religious denominations have been those of exclusive self-estimation—trusting issued out of Anne Arundel county in God that they are righteous and despising others. No doubt, some de nominations of Christians embrace more and taken in execution all the right, truth than others. Still, there are none so perfect as to be without some in and to the following property, and no denomination of real Christians is so erroneous; as not to possess things which are true, and excellent, and lovely, and of good reone ditto named Delilah; one ditto named Nancy, one ditto named Ally; one port.
